New and Selected Poems of Donald Justice by Donald Justice

"They are forty, and they know it, / But they do not like to speak / Of it, the way they once / Did when they were twenty."

Through his evocative language and insightful observations, Justice captures the bittersweet essence of aging, the fading of youthful ideals, and the relentless march of time.

The Power of the Image and the Precision of Language

Justice's poetry is renowned for its vivid imagery and meticulous use of language. He paints vivid pictures with words, creating a rich sensory experience for the reader. In "Sunset," he describes:

"The sun's great gong resounds / Against the sky, and falls / In golden shards on water / And the walls of houses."

His precise diction and carefully chosen words evoke a palpable sense of the natural world, capturing its beauty, its fluidity, and its ephemeral nature.

Exploring the Fragility of Human Existence

Justice's poetry also delves into the complexities of human existence, its vulnerability and its resilience. He explores themes of love, loss, and the search for connection in a world often characterized by isolation and impermanence. In "After the Storm," he writes:

"We walk out in the rain, / The two of us, our hands / Clasped together like lovers, / Or like children holding / Against the dark."

Through such poignant and evocative imagery, Justice captures the fragility of human bonds, the longing for connection, and the bittersweet beauty of human existence.

Influence and Legacy: A Poetic Luminary

Donald Justice's profound influence on American poetry is undeniable. His unique style, his exploration of existential themes, and his meticulous craftsmanship have left a lasting impact on the literary world. He received numerous prestigious awards, including the Pulitzer Prize for Poetry in 1980, and his work continues to be studied, analyzed, and celebrated by scholars and literary enthusiasts alike.
